

ALTUS DIGITAL SERVICES – MODERN SLAVERY STATEMENT

Altus is committed to preventing modern slavery and human trafficking in its business operations and supply chains.

As a UK-based IT services provider, our operations are considered low risk. However, we recognise that risks may exist within global supply chains, particularly in the manufacture of hardware and equipment supplied through third parties.

We operate a zero-tolerance approach to modern slavery and expect the same standards from our suppliers. We work with established and trusted suppliers and undertake basic due diligence when engaging new partners.

Responsibility for modern slavery sits with company directors, who review this approach periodically and ensure appropriate action is taken where any concerns arise.

We maintain clear reporting routes for any concerns, which are handled promptly, confidentially and without retaliation.

Altus is committed to continuously improving its approach in a proportionate and practical manner aligned with the size and nature of the organisation.